

Genetically modified cotton gets high marks in India

Smallholder farmers in central and southern India who planted genetically modified (GM) cotton achieve larger yields, greater profits and a higher living standard than those who grow conventional cotton, finds a study published today in the *Proceedings of the National Academy of the Sciences*¹.

View the original article here: Genetically modified cotton gets high marks in India – Nature.com