

GM maize more environmentally friendly than conventional image not found or type unknown

Spain, one European country that favors genetically modified (GM) crops, claims that transgenic maize is more environmentally friendly than the conventional maize version. The government is working on a new draft royal decree on coexistence of genetically modified organisms (GMO) crops, conventional and organic crops.

View the original article here: GM maize more environmentally friendly than conventional