

GM food labelling poses many questions

While the new Labelling and Advertising of Foodstuffs Regulations (GN R146), which came into effect in March, is offering consumers greater awareness, more information and better protection against false advertising on food and beverage products, the labelling of genetically modified (GM) food still seems to be problematic, says Camargue Underwriting Managers director of general liability Simon Colman.

View the original article here: GM food labelling poses many questions – Creamer Media's Engineering News