

Gene therapy treatment extends lives of mice with fatal disease

A team of University of Missouri researchers has found that introducing a missing gene into the central nervous system could help extend the lives of patients with Spinal Muscular Atrophy (SMA) – the leading genetic cause of infantile death in the world.

View the original article here: Gene Therapy Treatment Extends Lives of Mice with Fatal Disease – Bioscience Technology