

DNA evidence may not be an open and shut case

The belief that DNA samples mark out individuals like an infallible biological barcode is powerful. But the process of tying these genetic “footprints” to an individual can be compromised at key stages of an investigation.

View the original article here: DNA evidence may not be an open and shut case