

India: Scientists present joint front on GM crops

Rattled by the possibility of a ban on genetically modified (GM) crops in India, the country's top scientific organizations are planning a united defence of the technology and the need for research into such crops in India. Last month, a high-level committee appointed by the Supreme Court recommended stopping all ongoing open field trials on such crops for 10 years until a new set of conditions are enforced.

View the original article here: Scientists present joint front on GM crops