

Stem cells from strangers can repair hearts

LOS ANGELES — Researchers are reporting a key advance in using stem cells to repair hearts damaged by heart attacks. In a study, stem cells donated by strangers proved as safe and effective as patients' own cells for helping restore heart tissue.

View the original article here: Stem cells from strangers can help fix hearts, study finds; shows cell banking may be feasible