

Proposition 37: Gone, but probably not forgotten

California's Proposition 37, which would have mandated the labeling of many grocery products containing genetically-engineered ingredients, was defeated by voters on Nov. 6. The setback for the organic industry has temporarily discouraged the spread of this measure to other states. But it isn't over by a long shot.

View the original article here: Proposition 37 – gone, but probably not forgotten