

Quadruple DNA helix discovered in human cells

The following is an excerpt.

Quadruple helices that intertwine four, rather than two, DNA strands had been made in the laboratory, but were regarded as curiosities as there was no evidence that they existed in nature. Now, they have been identified in a range of human cancer cells.

View the original article here: Quadruple DNA helix discovered in human cells