

Church of England “may allow” GM crops on its land

The following is an excerpt.

The Church of England, which controls over £7bn of investments including large portfolios of agricultural land, has shifted its stance on genetically-modified crops, saying it may allow them to be grown provided it has satisfactory assurance on ethical standards.

View the original article here: Church of England shifts investment policy on GM