

GMO labeling is better if voluntary

The following is an excerpt.

Norwich, Conn. —

The Legislature's Public Health Committee this week gave favorable approval to a measure that would require labeling of all food products containing genetically modified organisms (GMO) — products where the genetic makeup has been altered through genetic engineering.

On the surface, it sounds like a no-brainer. Who wouldn't want to know what we're eating? The problem, however, is that the bill, if enacted, would only be effective within the borders of Connecticut. Several other states are considering similar legislation, but those measures would have no impact here, and our legislation would have no impact anywhere else.

View the original article here: Our View: GMO labeling is better if voluntary