

California: Sen. Boxer seeks nationwide labeling of genetically modified foods

The following is an edited excerpt.

Following the defeat of Proposition 37 last November, Sen. Barbara Boxer is proposing federal legislation that would require labeling for genetically-modified foods nationwide.

California voters failed to pass the measure last year, which would have made the state the first to require labeling for genetically-modified foods.

But Boxer is getting wide-ranging support from chefs and restaurateurs in the Bay Area.

View the original article here: Sen. Boxer seeks nationwide labeling of genetically modified foods