

Conversion of an anti-GMO activist

The following is an edited excerpt.

It's my 200th blog post and I do have much to celebrate. The record of how I went from anti-GMO blogger and science-ignorant to pro-science observer is all there in the archives. I am leaving it there on purpose to show, first hand, how someone can be open to new information, question what they believe, and change. If you read all the posts, which I don't expect anyone to actually do, but if you did, you'd notice an unfolding like this:

1. Fairly neutral beginning. I meant well.
2. Close scrutiny of the California Prop 37 election.
3. Ronnie Cummins in one ear, Jeffrey Smith in the other, a little Mike Adams the health ranger thrown in there with some Johnathon Matthews (GM Watch).
4. Full fledged anti-GMO dogma for a few months
5. Wait a minute, I smell a rat – a tumorous Seralini rat ...

Read the full story: Celebrating 200!