

Marketing to the big data inside us

The following is an excerpt.

A Minneapolis-based startup called Miinome plans to build what it calls the first “member-controlled human genetic marketplace.” The company, which has just three full-time employees and is still hunting for financing, is notable mostly for its bold idea: to sell DNA information to marketers.

View the full article here: Marketing to the big data inside us