

The forecast on the race, genetics, and intelligence debate

The following is an editorial summary.

It is often said that race is a social fact and a biological fiction. In reality, however, the idea of race serves a role in biology. It is useful to understand the genetic relationships of populations, and individual population identity, because traits correlate with population history. This relates to the ongoing debate about genetics, race and intelligence.

Read the full story here: How the race, intelligence, and genetics question will semi-resolve within the next 10 years