

Former anti-GM writer: Movement continue to disappoint

The following is an edited excerpt.

Here are three questions to ponder today.

1. What does it say about a movement when some of its loudest voices refuse to engage in public discourse with any individuals who may have opinions different from their own?
2. What does it say about a movement when some of its loudest voices freely circulate highly sensationalized but completely unsubstantiated data – yet refuse to stand up to challenges to confirm that data?
3. What does it say about a movement when activists march on city streets carrying signs that are deliberately designed to scare people with skewed, false or unrelated data – and they don't even know it?

Read the full post here: The Anti-GMO Movement Continues to Disappoint