

The threat of genome theft

The following is an excerpt.

Most of us occasionally worry that some online mishap, like a misreading of Facebook's latest privacy policy, will disclose to the world things we'd rather keep private: pictures unlikely to amuse your employer, rants about your neighbor's hygiene habits, or harmless-but-personal stuff that you only want to share with close friends. If the threat of losing your online privacy has you worried, future threats to the privacy of your genome should have you absolutely freaked out.

Read the full story here: Why You Should Be Scared of Someone Stealing Your Genome