

Who's polarizing the GE debate? Greenpeace

The following is an edited excerpt.

I love this piece in the Guardian about GMOs, I really do. It's so exquisitely disingenuous that you have to admire the writer's chutzpah. Let's start with this line (my emphasis)

Why is it that some politicians and prominent scientists and "communications" agencies are so exclusively preoccupied with GM [genetic modification]?

I can't imagine that Andy Stirling, the author, wrote that with a straight face. Because when it comes to preoccupation with genetically modified food, nobody rivals anti-GMO campaigners, especially groups like Greenpeace, who have gone so far as to vandalize research beneficial to public health.

Read the full post here: Who's Polarizing the GMO Debate?