

Chile fights GMO in national protest against 'Monsanto law'

Thousands of Chileans have rallied against a bill dubbed the "Monsanto law" that would let multinationals patent GMO seeds. Activists say it will not only compromise food sovereignty in Chile, but will also harm consumer health.

Mass protests were held in at least nine cities across the Latin American country to protest the bill that would allow for the development of genetically modified seeds. Activists carried banners emblazoned with slogans such as "Monsanto kills" and "Monsanto will patent your life."

Read the full, original story here: "Chile fights GMO in national protest against 'Monsanto law'"