

Washington State: Near-record funds are fueling GMO labeling campaign

With more than a month to go until Election Day, opponents of the Washington initiative to require labeling of genetically engineered foods already are climbing into record campaign-fundraising territory.

Behind recent multimillion-dollar contributions from biochemical corporations Monsanto and DuPont Pioneer, the No on I-522 Committee has pushed into second place all-time for fundraising by a campaign opposing a statewide ballot measure.

And, money raised on both sides of the battle over labeling of so-called GMOs also has ascended Washington's campaign-fundraising charts this week, breaking into the top five of collective fundraising totals for a ballot measure.

Read the full, original story here: "GMO labeling campaigns raising near-record money"

Additional Resources:

- "Monsanto puts \$4.6 million into fight against GMO labeling," Seattle Times
- "Anti-GMO labeling backers contribute big bucks to defeat Washington initiative," Oregonian