

After DNA test, white supremacist charged with terrorizing town

It's been a tough month for Craig Cobb. After the North Dakota white supremacist went on a TV show and got back the results of a DNA test that showed he was 14% black, he has since been arrested after allegedly running around Leith, N.D., with a gun.

And Cobb's standing plot to take over the tiny town of Leith and create a white-supremacist enclave, is now threatened by charges that he used a gun to terrorize several of the town's residents along with another supremacist over the weekend.

Cobb, 62, and Kynan Dutton, 29, were ordered held without bond after a court appearance Monday, according to the Grant County Sheriff's Office.

Read the full, original story here: After DNA test, white supremacist charged with terrorizing town