

Green Party presidential candidate Jill Stein says ‘GMOs not good for the planet or people’

Dr. Jill Stein, Green Party presidential candidate, spoke to a crowd of supporters at Wilkes University on Wednesday, Sept. 22.

Stein discussed various political topics during her speech including the Dakota Access pipeline, student loans and debt, police violence, immigration, healthcare, the climate crisis, the importance of clean food and international affairs.

. . . .

According to Stein, our world is in a “climate emergency” and a possible way to solve this emergency is to create a healthy and sustainable food system.

“GMOs [genetically modified organisms] are not good for the planet,” said Stein. “They are not good for the people.”
